"CONE ZONE" SEASON CAN BE TOUGH ON VEHICLES

Summer is the main season for "cone zones," road construction where you will likely hit a bump or two or come across loose stones and other hazards. These rough road conditions can be tough on a vehicle's steering and suspension system and can throw out the alignment, while loose stones have the potential to damage the vehicle's exterior or windshield. Even the most careful motorist, who is driving slowly and carefully through road construction, is bound to hit an unexpected bump or other road hazards.

The main symptoms of steering and suspension or wheel alignment problems are uneven tire wear, pulling to one side, noise and vibration while cornering, or loss of control. You should have your vehicles checked out immediately if any of these symptoms exist, as steering and suspension systems are key safety-related components and largely determine the car's ride and handling. Regardless of road conditions, these systems should be checked annually, and a wheel alignment should be performed at the same time.

Motorists should also do frequent visual checks of their vehicle's exterior and windshield to identify any chips, dings or cracks. These are small problems that can become costly repairs and safety hazards if they aren't taken care of immediately.

And, when in doubt, it's always best to let your trusted, local auto repair professional help you make sure your car is safe and ready for the road!
